Abstract. In a world of globalization and technological development where the information is rapidly assimilated, education is continuously changing as it needs to permanently adapt to the needs of our society, including the community of individuals with hearing impairments. These individuals are different from people with regular hearing abilities in terms of the way they communicate. As a first step, we propose that Romanian Mimic-Gestural Language (RMGL) would be introduced as an elective for elementary students, with further possible extensions to other grade levels and different levels of study. This way, we will make possible the integration and interrelations between all members of our society

Key words: curriculum development; hearing impairments; RMGL.
